Trump to crash Davos party with 'America First'

Trump's presence at forum likely to be disruptive, all-consuming

BY JUSTIN SINK & TOLUSE OLORUNNIPA

WASHINGTON

President Donald Trump will dominate the Davos forum as no US leader has before: a provocateur-in-chief practised at tweaking the elites who'll gather later this month to celebrate the global order he seems eager to tear down.

Previous US officials came to the World Economic Forum to defend international norms, but Trump's bellicose tweets, protectionist threats and disdain for international agreements promise to make his presence disruptive and all-consuming. Trump's "America First" agenda will get an icy reception among world financial and economic titans even as he becomes the most closely watched figure at the Alpine ski resort in Switzerland, said Ian Bremmer, the president of the Eurasia Group.

"Everything that Trump has done on a global stage is kind of anathema to what WEF stands for," Bremmer said in an interview. "There's no question that the speech will not be well received in terms of substance."

Trump will attend the event shortly after marking the one-year anniversary of his inauguration.

The US president's first year in office has featured repudiation of a Pacific Rim trade deal and the Paris Climate accord, threats to end the Nafta free trade agreement with Canada and Mexico, cavalier tweets on nuclear buttons and calls for new trade sanctions against China and moves to weaken the Iran nuclear deal.

US President Donald Trump.

Many of those actions have spurred recrimination from international leaders, even as the global economy has continued to improve and American stock markets have reached new highs. White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Trump will use the forum to make the case for his policies.

"The President welcomes opportunities to advance his America First agenda with world leaders," Sanders said Tuesday in a statement.

"At this year's World Economic Forum, the president looks forward to promoting his policies to strengthen American businesses, American industries, and American workers," she said.

Trump would be the first sitting American President to attend the meeting of bankers, corporate chiefs, academics and investors since Bill Clinton in January 2000.

Trump and his top aides previously avoided Davos, a redoubt of globalist, free-trade thinking starkly at odds with the president's rhetoric about representing "the forgotten man and woman." It is a regular stomping ground for Trump nemeses such as international investor George Soros.

In a presentation at the Vatican in 2014, Steve Bannon, who served as Trump's chief strategist before later falling out with the President, said the working people of the world were "tired of being dictated to by what we call the party of Davos".

Trump's decision to go to Davos took even some senior aides by surprise. Some of them weren't aware of his travel plans until Monday.

Potential race against Oprah 'a lot of fun': Trump

Washington: US President Donald Trump said he'd welcome a re-election challenge from fellow billionaire Oprah Winfrey. "Oprah would be a lot of fun," he said on Tuesday, predicting that he'd win.

Speculation about Winfrey's candidacy rose on Monday after she gave a speech at the Golden Globes regarded as a rebuke to Trump. The former talk-show host said she doesn't plan to run, but associates suggested she is considering a campaign. BLOOMBERG

US govt's scrapping of immigrant programme blocked by judge

BY PETER BLUMBERG & JOEL ROSENBLATT

SAN FRANCISCO

Hundreds of thousands of children of undocumented immigrants facing deportation won a court order temporarily blocking the Trump administration's decision to end the so-called Dreamer programme in March.

A federal judge in San Francisco on Tuesday rejected the government's argument that the courts can't review whether the president improperly decided to terminate the programme, Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, or DACA, that was started by former President Barack Obama.

The ruling capped a surreal day in which President Donald Trump held a 55-minute discussion on immigration with a bipartisan group of lawmakers that he opened to the media. While much of the discussion focused on Dreamers and a short-term policy fix, the President said he was willing to work out a deal that might provide millions of undocumented immigrants with an avenue to citizenship, an apparent reversal of his harsh anti-immigration policies during his first year in office.

US district judge William H. Alsup said the approximately 680,000 affected immigrants would suffer too much if he didn't put the phase-out of the programme on hold.

"The rescission will result in hundreds of thousands of individuals losing their work authorizations and deferred action status," he wrote.

"This would tear authorized workers from our nation's economy and would prejudice their being able to support themselves and their families, not to mention paying taxes to support our nation."

The White House issued a statement calling the ruling "outrageous , especially in light of the President's successful bipartisan meeting with House and Senate members at the White House on the same day". The justice department said it will contest the decision. BLOOMBERG

Bannon steps down from Breitbart News

BY MARGARET TALEV, JOSUA GREEN & GERRY SMITH

WASHINGTON & NEW YORK

Former White House strategist Steve Bannon has left his job as executive chairman of Breitbart News and will no longer host a radio show at SiriusXM Holdings after feuding with US President Donald Trump over remarks in a new book.

The White House has pressured its allies to cut ties with Bannon after his remarks in Fire and Fury by Michael Wolff became public last week. He lost the support of the Mercer family, Republican mega-donors and his closest financial patrons, after Trump spoke with Rebekah Mercer by phone.

Breitbart didn't say whether Bannon was fired or quit. "Steve was fighting to the very end", a Breitbart employee said, declining to be identified.

SiriusXM said in a statement after Breitbart's announcement that Bannon "will no longer host on SiriusXM", as "our programming agreement is with Breitbart News".

A person close to Bannon who also asked not to be identified said that Bannon's political involvement was interfering with Breitbart's performance as a news organization. He chose continuing his political operation, the person said. Bannon declined to comment.

Wolff's book says Bannon labelled as "treasonous" Donald Trump Jr.'s and Trump son-in-law Jared Kushner's 2016 meeting with Russian nationals in which the president's son expected to receive dirt on Democrat Hillary Clinton. Wolff also reported that Bannon called Trump's daughter Ivanka "dumb as a brick".

Bannon also predicted in the book that Robert Mueller, the special counsel investigating possible collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia, would "crack" Trump Jr. "like an egg on national TV".

Bannon issued a statement on Sunday in which he didn't specifically deny the comments or fully apologize for them. He said that he regretted waiting to respond to "inaccurate reporting".

"I'm proud of what the Breitbart team has accomplished in so short a period of time in building out a world-class news platform," Bannon said, according to Breitbart. BLOOMBERG

Trump says open to talks with N. Korea: Seoul statement

BY CHRISTINE KIM & DAVID BRUNNSTROM

SEOUL

US President Donald Trump told his South Korean counterpart Moon Jae-in on Wednesday he is open to talking with North Korea, the South's presidential office said after the two leaders spoke by telephone.

A day after North and South Korea held their first talks in more than two years, Trump said there will be no military action while talks were ongoing, the Blue House said in a note after the phone call.

"Both heads of state forecast the current inter-Korean talks could naturally lead to talks between the US and North Korea for the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula after the Pyeongchang Winter Olympics and agreed to negotiate closely on the progression of inter-Korean talks," the statement said. "Trump said that the United States is open to talks should North Korea want them, as long as the circumstances and timing are right." REUTERS
